

How to Get Help When Concerned about Your Child's Development - Birth to 5 years

I have concerns about my child's development. What should I do?

Children develop at their own pace; however, most children reach developmental milestones at or about the same age.

If you have concerns about how your child plays, learns, speaks, acts, or moves, it's important to:

1. Share your concerns with the child's doctor or teacher.
2. Make a referral to have your child evaluated at no cost for Early Intervention or Early Childhood Special Education services.

If you see a delay, don't delay!

What is Early Intervention?

Early Intervention (EI) helps children under the age of 3 who aren't developing as expected or have a medical condition that can cause delays, learn new skills and improve development. Infant & Toddler Connection of Virginia (ITC) provides early intervention services to eligible infants and toddlers. Examples of early intervention are speech therapy to help your child communicate and physical therapy to help your child's body movements.

To make a referral for Early Intervention, call 1-800-234-1448 or make an online referral.

What is Early Childhood Special Education?

Early Childhood Special Education (ECSE) is for children aged 2 (whose birthday falls on or before September 30) through age 5 with a disability in need of services to support development and school readiness. ECSE services are provided through your local school division. Examples of services include speech therapy to help the child communicate or instruction to help the child become independent.

To make a referral, you can call, email, or stop by your neighborhood school or contact the Special Education Director for the school division. If you need assistance with identifying an appropriate contact in your local school division, contact VDOE's Parent Ombudsman for Special Education by calling 1-800-422-2083.
